

1. Impact of tourism on local communities

Tourism brings economic growth, infrastructural development, and a sense of exchange of culture to the local environment and communities. Being one of the biggest industries, tourism provides employment to a large section of local communities present in the area. Tourism can be classified into various levels as local, national and global, where people visiting to a specific location of a city for which it is famous for, like Taj Mahal in Agra, serves as an example of local tourism. People visiting places like Shimla, Nainital, or Venice where the entire city serves as a tourist spot is an example of national tourism. While moving out to visiting another country like holidays in Hawaii or Rome as an international citizen serves the example of global tourism.

One major and most known impact of tourism is the economical benefits it bring to the state. Say you're a frequent traveller and like to visit various places. You decide to plan a trip to Goa this week with your family. This point onwards the economics comes to a place, You would need to book flight or train to reach Goa, book hotel rooms, and rent vehicles to travel across the city. All of this contributes to bring profits to the giants in transportation industry, like InterGlobe Aviation or Tata Aviation. Provides governments with funds from taxes or IRCTC profits. When you reach Goa, you expenditure on food, vehicle rent, buying local good and more benefits the local communities, this brings employment to the local people, and especially in a place like Goa where tourism is the main source of income for most of the locals. When you travel international like Hawaii, you enable international trade, giving benefit to the nation you are travelling to and to the locals where you are visiting.

Bringing up next is the second most important benefit of tourism, which is the infrastructural development. The government tends to invest more on places which brings revenue to them. Tourism is another important source of income for any government, thus they tend to promote it. To do so, they invest more on the development of roads, airports, railways, on the maintenance and cleanliness of the area and more.

Finally comes the cultural exchange, visitors from across the globe learn about the local tradition, history of the place, the food and more. The locals sometimes learn about the visitors, about the places they come from and more.

However tourism comes along with a negative side as well. Which is the overcrowding of the place, the pollution and throwing away of trash randomly by the tourists being a problem to the local communities.
